Cheshunt Park

Escape the hustle and bustle of town and discover the secrets of Cheshunt Park.

The Romans rested here from journeys along Ermine Street (the Roman road from London to York). With London within a days march, and springs providing fresh water, a small settlement began - the origin of modern Cheshunt.

Cheshunt Park became a public open space following the death of Phillis Debenham, the last of the Debenham family, in 1968.

King Harold used Ermine Street in 1066 to march his army to victory against the Vikings near York, before returning south to be defeated by William the Conqueror at the Battle of Hastings.

Fruit trees were once planted extensively across the estate. Now, an area of orchard has been replanted with local varieties of apples, pears, plums and gages. The grassland around the trees is naturally managed with periodic visits from Longhorn cattle, traditional British breeds.

Deer were kept here by the gentry and hunted for sport. The Cheshunt Park of today is just a small part of what was once a huge deer park during the medieval period.

Brantynesghay was the Debenham family home from 1865 - 1968. The new amphitheatre has been built on the site of the old house which was demolished in 1970.

Charles I's was the last King to live at the nearby Royal estate, Theobalds Palace (now Cedars Park), which then included Cheshunt Park. However, following his victory in the Civil War, Oliver Cromwell paid his army by dismantling the Royal estates. Two hundred years later, Cromwell's great grandson built a house, Brantynesghay, here.

Farmers ploughed these fields with oxen, creating 'ridge and furrow'. Look out for rippled patterns in the fields around the pond, evidence that these fields have been grassland for around 200 years.
